NSC BRIEFING

16 MAY 1956

DE-STALINIZATION IN POLAND

1. At May Paris reception for Tito, Polish ambassador to France made some rather telling remarks about situation in Poland to Ambassador Dillion.

2. He said Poles were taking "De-Stalinization" campaign very seriously; going much faster and further with it than any other country in Eastern Europe.

A. Said he expected extensive and important changes in composition of Polish government.

B. Next, he said, must always bear in mind Poland's geographic position and realize that, because of this geography, Poland would have to stay on a friendly basis with her powerful neighbor to East

3. Ambassador also remarked that one thing Poles feared most was German militarism.

A. When asked why Poland had not objected to arming of East Germany, he replied: "Don't believe for a minute that we Poles consider East Germans to be anything but Germans."

B. He said "at least two or three generations" would be required to change German character.

[] a strong evolutionary movement which is centered on efforts of a large group of influential party members to bring about a "Polish" form of Communist development--featuring such "liberal" aspects as freedom of expression and observance of legality in judicial and police practices.

A. This movement, which started after Stalin's death, became apparent during 1954-55 when a number of Polish writers began calling for less ideological control of arts.

B. This is not a revolutionary movement which would draw Poland into the Western camp, but one which strives for the "independent" Polish development of Communism within the Soviet Bloc.
